

FIGURE 2-2 Rays striking Earth at a low angle (toward the poles) must traverse more of the atmosphere than rays striking at a high angle (around the equator) and thus are subject to greater depletion by reflection and absorption.